Regarding claim 1, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, said apparatus comprising: at least one imager (108 and 110) for imaging at least a portion of an eye (E) of a patient (col. 21, lines 12-15), said at least one imager (108 and 110) configured to provide image data comprising at least two data types (118, 120, 130, and 132) selected from the group consisting of data from ophthalmic images using confocal microscopy data, retinal polarimetry data, optical coherence topography data, thermal image data, spectroscopic image data, refractometry data, and visible image data (col. 21, lines 12-17 and 30-34); and a data analysis module that interrelates data from said at least two data types to provide an interpretive result (col. 22, lines 49-57).

Regarding claim 2, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, further comprising a display module (104) that provides a display of analyzed data to a user (col. 23, lines 29-36).

Regarding claim 4, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, further comprising a data output module that reports said interrelated data from said at least two data types (118, 120, 130, and 132) (col. 24, lines 1-5).

Regarding claim 5, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, further comprising a report module (106) that reports said interpretive result (col. 24, lines 16-18).

Regarding claim 6, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, further comprising a single output module that reports said interrelated data from said at least two data types (118, 120, 130, and 132) and said interpretive result (col. 24, lines 1-5).

Regarding claim 7, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, further comprising a superposition module (156) for superimposing data obtained from at least two images (col. 24, lines 31-33).

Regarding claim 12, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, further comprising a display (260) for displaying said superimposed data obtained from at least two images (col. 27, lines 23-25).

Regarding claim 13, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, wherein said superimposed data obtained from at least two images comprises data obtained from at least two different data types (118, 120, 130, and 132) selected from the group consisting of data from ophthalmic images using confocal microscopy data, retinal polarimetry data, optical coherence topography data, thermal image data, spectroscopic image data, and visible image data (col. 21, lines 12-17 and 30-34).

Regarding claims 14 and 15, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, further comprising a memory for storing image data (col. 23, lines 42-45).

Regarding claim 16, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye but does not specifically disclose where said applied stress is selected from the group consisting of intra ocular pressure variation, blood pressure variation, oxygen concentration variation, exercise, flashing light, drug administration, administration of insulin, and administration of glucose. It is inherent that applied stress would fall under one of the above categories this being reasonably based upon they are medically proven to apply stress to the body.

Regarding claim 19, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, wherein said memory for storing image data is configured to archivally store image data (col. 25, lines 52-55).

Regarding claim 23, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, wherein said data analysis module is configured to automatically determine a presence of an abnormality (col. 22, lines 49-61).

Regarding claim 92, Hohla et al. discloses, in figures 7A-7C, an apparatus for performing multiple procedures involving the eye, performing an examination of a patient using the apparatus of claim; treating said patient based at least in part on a result obtained from said examination (col. 24, lines 1-5).
